Hackers have gotten a bad rap as lurking thieves who want to steal your credit card numbers or identity online.

"But the history of hacking started as much more positive," said Scott Barnwell, a geographic information systems specialist with the city of Asheville's IT department.

Barnwell traces the original hackers to World War II. Mechanics took the bullet-riddled airplanes that landed at the airbases. Armed with hacksaws, ingenuity and spare parts, they reworked the planes to fly again the next day. ...
